"An engagingly honest and persuasive treatise, full of ingenious ideas.... Elbow ought to have written it forty years ago. Think of the trouble it would have saved me!"

Howard Nemerov

"A book which makes me mentally shout Bravo! again and again. Page after page, chapter after chapter, Peter Elbow gives direct and down-to-earth advice for beginning writers.... It is a book that asks to be flipped through, talked over, and returned to. It is a volume to annotate and dog-ear."

Meredith Sue Willis in Teachers & Writers

Writing with Power is a practical handbook for anyone who needs to write, from the student writing an essay to the professional writer working on a story to the manager writing a memo for a tight deadline. "Writing with power doesn't just mean getting power over readers. It means getting power over yourself and over the writing process: knowing what you are doing as you write; figuring out what you really mean; being in charge, having control; not feeling stuck or helpless or intimidated. I am particularly interested in this second kind of power in writing, and I have found that without it you seldom achieve the first kind." From Writing with Power

Peter Elbow is Director of the Writing Program in the Department of English at the State University of New York, Stony Brook. He taught the "Workshop in Language and Thinking" at Bard College which received national attention as an innovative response to the familiar problem of students who come to college with poor writing skills. Elbow has also taught at Wesleyan University, M.I.T., Franconia College, The Harvard School of Education, and The Evergreen State College. His first book, Writing Without Teachers (GB 435), has already established itself as a classic in the field.
